BRUSSELS, April 9 (Reuter) - Foreigners and aid workers travelling in three convoys of cars fled the southern Rwandan town of Butare on Saturday and managed to cross the border into Burundi, a Belgian radio correspondent reported.

The RTBF correspondent said in a report from Butare that the town was calm but that the convoys had left in case the civil war and ethnic bloodletting spread to the area.

The correspondent said the three convoys totalled around 100 vehicles but gave no figures on the number of people who had crossed the border.
